About XRM 2026

The 17th edition of the International Conference on X-ray Microscopy (XRM) represents a significant milestone, as it will be held for the first time in Latin America. XRM 2026 will be held in Campinas. Located just 100 km from São Paulo, the city is a hub of science, technology, and innovation.

XRM serves as the central conference of its community, and will bring together 300 to 400 experts including scientists, engineers, and industrialists. The event addresses the most recent advances in X-ray microscopy technology as well as state-of-the-art applications in a wide range of science disciplines through a program of lectures, communications, posters, exhibitors, social events, and networking. In 2026, participants will also have the opportunity to visit Sirius, the Brazilian synchrotron light source, the most complex scientific infrastructure ever built in the country, and one of the world's most modern electron accelerators.

About Campinas

Campinas is a metropolitan city of more than one million inhabitants, located in the state of São Paulo and in close proximity to the state capital of the same name. It is home to universities, several technology parks, and research and development centers, as well as global companies that are benchmarks in technological innovation.

The city is served by Viracopos Airport, which operates international flights, and is also located near Guarulhos International Airport and Congonhas Airport. Transfers can be made by bus, taxi, or app-based ride services.

The venue

The Brazilian Center for Research in Energy and Materials (CNPEM) campus

A sophisticated and ebullient environment for research and development that is the only one of its kind in Brazil and found in only a few scientific centers in the world, the Brazilian Center for Research in Energy and Materials (CNPEM) is a private, non-profit organization overseen by the Ministry of Science, Technology, and Innovation (MCTI).

The Center operates four national laboratories and is home to Sirius, the most complex project in Brazilian science and one of the world's most advanced synchrotron light sources. CNPEM is driven by research into solutions that impact the areas of health, energy and renewable materials, agroenvironment, and quantum technologies.

The main auditorium seats 450 people, and additional spaces are available in the Sirius building for research presentations, poster sessions, and networking opportunities.
